SCRIPT SELFIE

Just like this... Just a little bit... I sit down and I make up with my mom. Only her can understand that. She says it enhances my features. 'You gonna to age and age. Use your age'... I know but I just can't. I don't like my skin. It's been really poky and it's hard, it's very sensitive and breaks out very easily. I'll never ever take pictures of my head down because it just looks really bad on all the pictures. I think that a lot of girls compare themselves to what they see in magazines and like movies, videos. I don't like my age or my wrinkles, there's nothing I can do about it.

Isn't it time to redefine beauty?

I am here today to talk to you about beauty. You have the power to change and redefine what beauty is. The power is in your hands because now more than ever it's right at your fingertips. We can take Sophie's. At the end of this breakthrough experience, we gonna have a gallery show.

The Challenge. Take an honest selfie. No filters, no edits. Have your mother do the same.

Cheese. There! Fine. I want my mom to know she's beautiful. She doesn't have to change.

Yeah! Why are doing that face?

I worry about people who are going to judge me. I'm like scared putting myself out there.

Going to the photo exhibit is really cool for me, people were writing nice comments about my hair.

I'm not blond, super tall or skinny but that doesn't mean I'm not beautiful.

I was looking at myself and I realized that I am beautiful, I'm pretty cute. Since we had this experience together, I have realized she's fine the way she is. The social medias are putting brains in your hands, the creativity of social media is definitely allowing you to start to define for yourself what beauty is.

Beauty is being strong and being brave and being happy with yourself.

The power is in your hands.
