SCRIPT DE LA VIDEO

Presenter: Welcome back! Do you know what sucks? Being unemployed. The job hunt can be this relentless pursuit that can ultimately feel fruitless. Well, recently we went to a job fair being held in One Hundred Mile House that helps give job seekers a little bit of hope.

Reporter: I'd like you to meet Dustin Porter. This young eager chap is currently unemployed and has been relentlessly job hunting for the past two months.

Dustin Porter: Well, I got laid off from the job that I had been doing for the past six months. I was on call for a couple of months and the work just wasn't there. It's been really stressful and everywhere I go, it's kind of the same story, they just say they are not looking for anyone right now and my resume is in the file... if anything comes up, they'll give me a call.

Reporter: So, this fair timing is perfect for Dustin and maybe he just might find the perfect match. This is all part of a tour put on by the provincial government over the past six months. And it's helped connect many job hunters with job seekers.

Scot Durward: It's been a really busy day actually. We've had a number of applications, you know, scheduled some interviews to follow up with people for next week and we are really excited about the response we got. You know, being one of the larger employers in the region, it's important for us to also reach out to some of the smaller centers.

Stephanie Munez: Well, our job is to connect job seekers to employers and to resources that would help them gain information and skills on training and as well as career development and so just raising awareness of those opportunities and resources will hopefully decrease the unemployment rate.

Reporter: As a job seeker, there are plenty of things to learn to help the hunt.

Stephanie Munez: Don't give up, there are so many opportunities available. I would say that they aren't aware of the resources available to them and so, again, that's pretty much what we are here for, is to kind of, direct them in the right path, of talking to the right people and getting the right information.

Dustin Porter: I was nervous, I didn't really know how to approach any of the booths but everyone, kind of, more approaching me than me approaching them so this was very friendly and it was a lot easier than I thought.

Reporter: Job fairs like this create some incredible opportunities for those looking for work. And it's not uncommon that they find success.

Scot Durward: Two years ago, you know, we wouldn't necessarily be coming to a forum like this and now we actually need to be getting out there. This is a great forum because, you know, we can actually come to the community, be very visible and answer questions and really recruit some of those... that top talent that we want to come and work with us ...

Reporter: So, with that in mind, where does that leave our friend Dustin here?

Dustin Porter: Well, I went straight to the Tolko booth. Are you guys taking applications for a Williams Lake? And it was very beneficial because I have been checking in with Tolko and I always talk to the front desk lady and today I got to talk to the hiring lady, so that was really good and I got an interview.

Reporter: Yup! That's right! Dustin came in jobless and he is now one step closer to getting some work. So, it turns out that these fairs are a big help after all.

Dustin Porter: It feels really good. I'm excited about it!

Reporter: With go! Williams Lake, I'm Jonathan Horst
