1. Complétez la conclusion du présentateur de l'organisation.

But if we are so good, why haven't we eliminated hunger from the world? Because: there's no end to wars, political upheaval, natural disaster and human cruelty. Fortunately, there's no end to our commitment to feed the Hungry either. The World food program: there is no greater gift and no better way to give it.

2. Rédigez un court résumé présentant le WFP.

Script de la video

The woman who would have cured aids died when she was 3 – she starved to death.

The baby who would have grown to such Olympic records that would stand for generations never competed because her mother was so underfed she was never born.

The man who could have brought peace to the Middle East never thought the thought – his mind was dulled by malnutrition.

24,000 people a day, 18,000 of them children – dead of hunger. 800 million living on a very razor-thin edge of starvation, quietly slipping away in corners of the world that you, by accident of birth, have the good fortune of never seeing.

So many possibilities, so much genius, so many lives never lived, so many of us, not them, us, people who have as much the right to live as anyone else on this planet.

We can't stop the floods, or the draughts, or the wars; we are not Allah, God or anybody even close, but there is something we can do: we can be the people who stand between life and death, between hope and hunger. We are the United Nations World Food Program, the world's largest and the most effective tool for feeding a hungry world.

We are the people who find the food shortages and the food resources and bring them together. We are the ships and the planes and the warehouses and trucks who deliver the food to agencies like the Red Cross, the red Crescent and more than 1100 others. We are the people who find compassionate governments willing to help, enlightening corporations willing to give.

We are the people who are in the hungriest places, following the shipments, to make sure they get to the right people. We are also the people who make sure poor children come to school and get a chance to think about things others than where their next meal is coming from.

Our mission and our reason for being is so simple but so huge: to stop the dying and start the living, to stop the hunger and start the hoping, not just for villages of people but nations of people. Each year, we bring food to nearly 90 million sons, daughters, mothers and fathers in more than 80 countries.

But if we are so good, why haven't we eliminated hunger from the world? Because there's no end to wars, political upheaval, natural disaster and yes, human cruelty. Fortunately, there's no end to our commitment to feed the hungry either. The World Food Program: there is no greater gift and no better way to give it.
